

Craig Cathcart

Craig is an academic lawyer, mediator and dispute resolution specialist who teaches and trains across a range of subjects.

In recent years Craig has taken his legal and practical insights into consumer law and developed a wide expertise in the area of dispute resolution.

Subject specialisms include negotiation, mediation, ADR, business law, management and leadership.

Currently Craig teaches mediation and negotiation at Queen Margaret and Strathclyde Universities, and is an external examiner for Robert Gordon University. He also provides training, research and consultancy in dispute resolution to many organisations across the UK and Channel Islands. He further applies his ADR knowledge by working as a mediator.

Craig chairs the Regulatory Committee of the Law Society of Scotland, sits on the board of Scottish Mediation, and has served as a governor and director of various not for profit bodies.
